JAMES MELVIN SOMEROSKI

Mr. Someroski was born in Piney Fork ,Ohio in 1932. He studied at the Cleveland Insitute of Art where he received the Agnes Gund Memorial Award; at the Cape School of Art, Provincetown, Mass; at Cranbrook Academy; and at Kent State University on a Tuition Scholarship. Exhibitions in which his work has appeared include the Cleveland May Show; the Akron Spring Show; the New Year Show--Butler Insitute; Fall Show, Canton Art Insitute; the Baldwin Museum of Art and Crafts show,Massillon Ohio; the National Decorative Arts Exhibition, Wichita,Kansas; the Smithsonian Inst.Traveling Exhibition; the Midwestern Designer-Craftsmen Show and the Ohio Designer Craftsmen Show. He is presently an Assistant Professor at the School of Art,Kent State University.

JOURNEY FROM THERE TO HERE- THEN AND NOW

MEL SOMEROSKI

My journey in enamelling has been simple. Quite simple. When I studied with Kenneth Bates at the Cleveland Institute of Art the focus was on enamel technique and studies from nature. I stayed with that for several years before venturing into the work of the late 1950's which began to explore pure form and material with a more serendipitous approach to the design. Illusions of reality crept back into the enamels of the 1970's. And I began to do more and more objects such as boxes, bracelets and crosses. These were for specific people and were my responses to them with the material.

The current work is a collection of my re-cycled memories done in enamel on re-cycled washing machine lids and appliance parts. The parts have been used for testing in many cases and the evidence of the testing remains beneath the surface of my work as reminders of what they were-a sort of history of the parts. Upon these are imposed motifs developed for meditation and prayer, something I began working with in the late 1960's, and images developed from the many sketchbooks and journals which I've kept during my extensive traveling both in the United States and abroad from about 1955 to the present.

In the Fall of 1988 an opportunity came to work with enamels developed and produced for industry in a situation with technicians and colorists who developed these enamels. This made possible experimentation with their materials and techniques under supervision and direction from highly qualified specialists.

At first I worked on technique. The enamels were all liquid. I used some of my knowledge from ceramics for application. And I experimented with painting and drawing techniques. Working with a spray gun was not entirely new since I'd used one to do numerous ceramic pieces early in my career. But now I was seeking a new expression.

I turned to some of the ideas and images now which were developed for meditation when I worked in Sri Lanka during the late 1960's. They gave me a sense of security and I was certain they would be helpful as I refined my technique and developed the surface and potential space with which I hoped to work.

As time went by-several months-I yearned to work with other images. So I turned to the numerous sketch books and journals I'd kept over the years. The first images used were of atmospheric effects, mountains, and sky. Seeing these take form beside the meditation pieces suggested new possibilities.

JOURNEY FROM THERE TO HERE- THEN AND NOW

MEL SOMEROSKI

I decided to place the meditation images over the images of places. It would be difficult to explain exactly why I decided to do this. There were formal considerations related to the composition which I found enticing but it went beyond that. It was a significant move on my part toward a more personally meaningful statement about these places and my ability to survive the encounters which I had with them. Often-time outward conditions were threatening with civil war, potential military invasion, unsafe and difficult living conditions. But I knew that it was inward conditions which helped me to survive. I was helped by meditation which I had begun experimenting with in the mid-1960's to help with stress and emotional exhaustion.

It seemed fitting to me to bring these images together in this context. When I did it seemed I had discovered for myself a new dynamic on the surface which had to be reckoned with in terms of organizational control and the potential for space which I'd begun to explore. A real space, an illusionistic space, and an inner space.

The sketch books abound with reminders of the past. I still meditate. And there seems to be an endless supply of old washing machine lids available. So I'll continue this direction, this journey, for awhile, working with the problems of control coupled with the search for a greater expression.

I am currently completing a memorial in plique-a-jour enamels, "Victims of War - the Children," and one in silverpoint on gesso panels, "Victims of War." They were inspired by visits to the Treblinka and Majdanek death camps in Poland. I visited them in 1980-81 during my residency at the University of Warsaw. This also forms the basis for my next performance arts piece which will be previewed this summer and premier for two nights at the Cleveland Public Theater in November 1989.

MAJDANEK: A MEMORIAL

FOR THOSE WHO SUFFERED AND THOSE WHO DIED THERE

by Mel Someroski and Fibre

OCT. 25 & 26

8:00 p.m.

MAJDANEK

Nothing I had read or seen really prepared me for the encounter when in 1981 I visited Majdanek, the concentration camp near Lublin, Poland almost on the Russian border. That visit, and the ensuing memories which continue to haunt me, form the basis for much of my work since then.

It is estimated that about 360,000 people died in Majdanek, a concentration camp which was ordered built in the Autumn of 1941 and which was liberated on July 24, 1944. That was 46 years ago. These people died from starvation, cold, disease, and exhaustion as well as from hangings, drownings, and deadly injections of phenol and evipan. They were victims, too, of mass exterminations by gassings and shootings. Camp functionaries were free to kill as they saw fit. The largest execution at Majdanek occurred on November 3, 1943 when nearly 18,400 people were shot in ditches dug near the crematorium. The victims were Jewish children, women, and men. Available documents indicate that over fifty nations or states were represented by those who suffered and died at Majdanek.

Now in these difficult times when people continue to die while others say it didn't happen it is appropriate and timely to remember the prisoners of Majdanek and the victims of war and suppression. Perhaps in remembering some will find the strength of spirit to work toward preventing further crimes against Humanity.

Eells Art Gallery was made possible through a gift from William H. Eells, one of the founders of the Blossom Music Center and first chairman of its Board of Governors. Named in honor of his parents, Hastings and Amy Eells, the gallery was conceived by Cleveland architect Peter Van Dijk, designer of the Blossom Music Center, and constructed in 1975. The gallery is owned by the Kent State University Foundation and operated by Kent/Blossom Art. Each summer it is the site of exhibitions, chamber music concerts and other events.

Eells Art Gallery is open Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings during scheduled performances of the Cleveland Orchestra. The gallery opens sixty minutes before the start of each concert.

Kent/Blossom Art gratefully acknowledges support from the following organizations for their participation in this exhibition and in this summer's enameling program:

Ferro Corporation, Cleveland, OH
Erie Ceramic Arts Company, Erie, PA
Greensteel Inc., Alliance, OH
Maeto Studios, Daytona Beach, FL

Enamel on Metal

Eells Art Gallery Blossom Music Center

June 30-July 15, 1990

This exhibition was supported with funding from the Ferro Corporation.

Fireworks: Enamel on Metal is a visual demonstration of the range of application that exists for the art of enameling. This exhibition, for example, is comprised of works done for industrial purposes, by industry for individual artists, and by artists who are better known for their work in other media. It also includes examples of work by full-time professional enamelists. Enamels could also be called glass on metal since glass is fused to a metal ground at very high temperatures.

According to Darry Faust, manager of Porcelain Enamel Research for Ferro:

Commercial usage of porcelain enamel is primarily associated with sheet steel, cast iron, and aluminum coating. They are distinguished from the organic finishes by the need to fire them at elevated temperatures, usually red heat. Normally, processing above 800 degrees Fahrenheit (425 degrees C) is used to mature the vitreous or glass coating. Porcelain enamel coatings are found on major appliances such as stoves, washing machines, dryers, water heater tanks (interior), sanitary ware- bathtubs, lavatories- and cookware. Porcelain enamel is also used for architectural coatings on exterior and interior surfaces. Porcelain enamel may also be found in pipes, pump components, agricultural storage tanks, and electronic microcircuitry. Lastly, porcelain enamel is also found on numerous decorative and artistic panels ranging in size from personal jewelry to large scale architectural applications.

It is perhaps little known that many artists have had editions of their work reproduced in enamel by industry. This, of course, harkens back to the early history of enameling in Europe, when artists from across the continent journeyed to enameling centers to have their work done by artisans who specialized in enamel.

The Ferro Corporation in Cleveland, an international producer of industrial specialty materials and a world leader in enamel and glaze technology, has long been associated with enamel art. This involvement dates back to the 1930's when Ferro supported the work of Cleveland's renowned enamelist, Edward Winter, through the use of the company's laboratories, and its porcelain frits and color.

The full time enamelist, the artist who creates his own works in the varied and rich techniques available in enameling, has long been important in the world of art. These works may serve as adornment, useful objects, sculpture and painting, or as architectural surfaces. The great traditions of enamel art continue today, frequently altered by new technology and the creative mind. The exhibit reflects some of the diversity, form, and style in the area of enamel on metal.

Ferro Corporation has a distinguished history of support for the arts, and especially for the use of porcelain enamel as an art medium. From 1931 to the early 1970's, Edward Winter used the Ferro porcelain enameling furnaces to do work on his murals and other art forms. He also utilized many Ferro enamel products and ceramic colors in his works.

The new interest in large scale enamel art at Kent State University, and the possibility of using non-traditional commercial enamels, offer new opportunities for artists and designers to utilize enamel works in interior and exterior arrangements. Ferro Corporation is pleased to contribute to the program, and pleased to assist artists and students in their work.

The Erie Ceramic Art Company has been in continuous operation in the porcelain enameling industry since 1946. The company is diversified, creating many types of sprayed enamel ware-items and decorative enamel parts such as meter dials, signs, clock dials, and multi-colored custom giftware. Examples of this decorative enamel process include works by the art director, Carl Sundberg, and many limited editions for artists such as Richard Anuskiewicz and Erté.
